VANCOUVER, May 8, 2018 – Mogo Finance Technology Inc. (TSX:MOGO) (NASDAQ:MOGO) (“Mogo” or the “Company”), one of Canada’s leading financial technology companies, today announced its financial and operational results for the first quarter ended March 31, 2018.

“We delivered our highest-ever quarterly revenue, accelerating growth in our subscription & services revenue, and rapid member growth in the first quarter,” said David Feller, Mogo’s Founder and CEO. “Our goal is to become the go-to financial app for the next generation of Canadians, and every quarter we focus on improving our value proposition, whether with new features, an improved user experience or new products. We continued to make great progress in these areas in the quarter and in proving out our freemium model, where we attract users with benefits such as free credit score monitoring and, over time, cross-sell them into our other products, including premium account offerings. We believe that the future of financial services will not only be a digital one, but increasingly mobile-first as Millennials and Gen Z want to manage their financial life from an app, and expect a modern digital experience that is both simple and engaging.”

“It was a very strong quarter for the company, highlighted by a 110% increase in our subscription and services revenue, which represented 35% of total revenue at quarter end, up from 21% last year, and is increasingly driven by recurring monthly subscriptions,” said Greg Feller, President & CFO. “Subscription and services continues to be the primary driver of our revenue growth alongside managed growth of our MogoMoney product. Excluding the impact from our legacy short term loans, based on our continued strategic shift away from this product, our core revenue had its third consecutive quarter of accelerating growth to 60% in the first quarter.”

First-Quarter Financial Highlights
